

Queen of the Night

Did you know that the Queen of the Night (Cereus jamacaru) may have a beautiful flower but is a highly invasive plant which is often distributed by birds, monkeys and baboons? The good news is that you no longer need to use harmful chemicals to eradicate them. An environmental solution is at hand: a bug has been discovered which, when introduced, destroys the plant but has no known adverse effect on the environment or other plants. If you want to know more contact the Moepel Conservancy.
